The CHIEF JUDGE :- This I am inclined to regard as the first step towards a really efficient Judicial service. One difficulty is no doubt the small number of appointments available, but this difficulty would be diminished if a scheme on the lines suggested at the Conference ~~was~~ were adopted, severing the magistracy from the executive departments, and making Civil and Criminal Courts together a Judicial Department. It is on these lines, I think, the Government should go if it can.

III/HC 28/1

Mr. Justice K.S. CHANDRASEKHARA AIYAR :- Unless ~~we~~ know how far the Government would be prepared to go in this direction (for instance, whether they would agree to a raising of the scale of salaries and and a revision of the rules as to pension of judicial officers, simultaneously with the closing of avenues to promotion in other Departments), it seems hardly worth while formulating proposals.

Mr. Justice T. PARAMASIVA IYER :- I have no objection to the Judicial Department being made as technical as possible, but the 'technique' should in this poor agricultural country include a good knowledge of Revenue Accounts and a practical acquaintance with the ryot gathered in the course of two or three jamabandy seasons.

Order thereon. No. J 4519-23.

... As far as civil judges are concerned Govt consider that they are technical officers, and that only men qualified and competent to discharge the functions are appointed as judges.

Govt have always recognised that judicial work requires special training and have given the matter careful consideration in framing the rules. The Order is therefore issued in the form in which it is to take effect.
